I suck at summaries.

1. Chapter 1

Hey guys, my trial story is over and I am now starting an official story, I do not own Fairy Tail. I hope you enjoy this story, I will try to upload a chapter every Sunday, but please bear in mind I live in a very small town and the signal here is horrible. **

Natsu stared at the girl lying before him; the two of them had broken up almost four years ago, now she was covered in blood and at the brink of death. The cold air surrounding them made the matter seem even worse.

"Natsu, I n-need you to l-lis-ten to me, she I-is all al-one. I am going to d-die. You h-have a dau-ghter, I left her at h-ome when Master called me b-back to help with the miss-sion."

"What the hell are you saying?!" rage engulfed the young wizard. He didn't understand what this woman had said. After they broke up, horribly broke up four years ago she had taken a 10 year job and left. The only reason she was here now was because master had ordered her to return home in order to defeat a massively large group of monsters. The whole guild was taking part in this mission.

"I'm sorry I d-did not te-lllll you a-about her but we se-perated so fast and violen-tly that I couldn't b-bear the thought of even fac-ing you, especially after what I said to you back then, I knew there would be no possibility of you forgiving me, so I fled." The woman coughed up blood and pulled the locket off of her neck. She saw the anger in his eyes, the hate he bared for her. Well after what she did to him she understood. She held the locket to him, he unwillingly took it and opened it, and there was a picture of a small child with his hair and her black big shiny eyes.

Master ran over and tried to help Jade by putting pressure on her wounds, there was massive gashes out of her waist, exposing her rib cage. The master knew about the child but he also knew it was not his place to tell Natsu. She died a few seconds after that, just died and Makarov went all titan on the enemies they faced, he for one felt great sadness, after all one of his children had just died in his arms. Natsu however was frozen where he stood, he felt anger and love and hatred and pride in him, he was a father but he wasn't at the same time. He turned to Jade to get answers only to see her completion turn even paler than it originally was, he knew immediately she was dead when his dragon slayer abilities couldn't find her heart beat. All that ran through his mind was that he did not understand just how selfish this woman was, she knew he valued nothing more than family. He clutched the locket to his heart.

After the battle continued racing for about two days, everyone was exhausted but master called everyone to the guild. Surprisingly only the one member was killed, but all of them were extremely injured, most of them were in a coma or under a medical coma as Porluisca called it. Natsu was one of those. Master called Ezra to his office and closed the door.

"Master, I should have been more aware of my surroundings, I cannot believe Jade has vanished from us. Please hit me" Erza said as she turned her face from the master.

"Calm down child, no one is to blame for the events that transpired during this battle. I have a request to make of you, I need you to go pick up Jade's daughter, who is also Natsu's daughter," Erza's eyes widened in surprise and sadness, "I would send Natsu but he will be sleeping for a few more days and well, she left the child alone thinking she would return to Natshi's side. Well, since things did not turn out that way you will go." Master Macarov was angry at the woman for keeping the secret from Natsu, she had also sworn him to secrecy, but in a way he felt like he understood her twisted sense of protecting herself.

"Take this locket to the child, tell her what happened and that you were sent to bring her to her father and her new family, tell her Fairy Tail is waiting. One more thing Erza, the child will most likely be suffering a lot, after hearing of her mother's passing, so be gentle and kind."

Erza sat gaping at the man before her, trying to process what he had just told her while holding the dangling locket. Natsu, her friend Natsu, was a father! She thought about Jade's sudden disappearance from the guild, taking a request like that was not something Jade would usually do, and when Erza tried to contact her through the Lacrima, she got no response.

"Master, surely we should wait and take Natsu, I don't know if I can handle such a huge task, this is a very sensitive matter and I am unsure if it would be wise for me to step in here." Erza frowned.

"Nonsense child, if anyone can do this it would be one of my most trusted children. You can do this Erza, you need to hurry! I know Natsu won't interject because it is you, he may be a stubborn reckless idiot, but he would place his life in your hands, same goes for the child."

Erza didn't waste another second; she headed straight to the train station and booked her ticket. Master told her about the town where Jade was performing her mission, another wizard was following Erza to take over the mission. The town was small and deep in the mountains. The train would only take them that far, and then they would have to walk.

Erza did not even spare a glance at the other mage, the two had talked in the past but neither really felt like striking up a conversation after the events that transpired in the last few days, they were physically and mentally exhausted.

The mage that followed Erza had gone his separate way to meet with the townspeople and get informed on his mission while Erza stood in front of the cabin. It took her four days to reach it by foot and would take them maybe five getting back, since she would be travelling with a child. Erza knew Natsu would already be up and kicking, so she tried her best to hurry, she stood in front of the door, anxious to knock. If she knocked then everything would be real. She slowly lifted her hand to the green door and lightly knocked on the wooden frame.

FAIRY TAIL

Natsu woke up and was still groggy when he remembered what happened. His body was sore and his magic was still pretty low. Still he shot up and tried to fight his way to the door, the only thing running through his mind was Jade's whisper that his daughter was all alone. He wasn't sure if the dragon in him was urging him further to go get his offspring, all he knew was that she was his, his own flesh and blood and he needed to get to her as soon as possible.

His body did not want to comply with him, he had to force every muscle in his body to move, he was still exhausted but he only thought about the picture, the picture of a small face smiling with big eyes.

"Natsu" Master yelled as his large fist crushed him to the ground, Lucy and Mira yelled at master to stop. Lucy hurried to Natsu's side to help him regain his breath, slowly rubbing his back while Mira gave the Master a disapproving look.

"Natsu, calm down, I already sent Erza to fetch her, you are in no condition to leave now. You still need medical attention. Have faith in your nakama!" the master yelled, at those words Natsu calmed down a bit.

"Master, I don't know what she was thinking! She took away something that was meant to be part of my family! Someone special! I missed so much already." Natsu yelled as his body shook, Lucy just sat beside him, hiding her face while she kept one hand on his shoulder. Master nodded and took Natsu into his office, Mira entered with tea and some medicine for Natsu, then she took her leave once again.

"Natsu, what Jade did was wrong, but, for her it felt right, we don't know what goes through the heads of most people, she was scared and alone, now your child is scared, but she is not alone. Erza will bring her home, and then, you will have to be there for her and raise her. You are a father now" Master had tears of pride in his eyes, another one of his children were growing up.

Natsu listened closely to what Master said. He had a lot to think about, this was not going to be easy. He still felt rage at the woman that took away his Child, made him miss out on so much, but he just wanted to see the child for himself, and love the girl.

Natshi's pov

Her mother had left almost two weeks ago; she was starting to get worried. She never went away for long. Since she started talking her mother had thought her how to read. She spent most days behind books. At the young age of three she could read most books, just with her mother by her side explaining everything in great detail. Her fourth birthday would be coming up in a few months and she made her mother promise to tell her about the guild, and most importantly her father.

Her mother said she was exceptionally smart for her young age. Her mother's magic consisted of guns magic, but her magic was fire, she discovered it after meditating with the monks up the mountain. Needless to say they were terrified of her after that. Although she could only create a small flame, it made her extremely happy; she at least knew two things about her father. He was a fire mage and he must have her hair.

Knock knock

First chapter is up, as you may or may not have realized, it is a different timeframe almost like a parallel universe. Please like and follow and review if the need arises. Have a nice evening and lots of love and stuff.

2. Chapter 2

She jumped in her seat; her book on magic types fell to the ground. No one ever came up to the cabin and her mother always said not to open the door to strangers, so needless to say she was scared. They were pretty deep into the mountain and nobody really knew where they lived, she could honestly not recall anybody ever coming to their house.

"Mommy, did you lose your key?" no answer. Natshi picked up her book and placed it on the table; she waited a few more minutes before speaking again.

"Who is it?" she tried again, taking a few steps forward and holding a breath, it felt like the door would attack her at any minute.

"Ohm, my name is Erza Scarlet; your mom," silence, "sent me."

Erza, her mother had told her about the guild she was in, Fairy Tail, although she only mentioned little bits of it. Natshi ran over to the book case and pulled out the photo album, quickly tossing the pages right and left until she found the group photo, there her mother had written their names underneath. Erza had red hair and wore armor. Slowly she made her way to the door, pulled out a small step stool and unlocked it, opening it just an inch so she could sneak a peek. The woman smiled softly at her. Natshi held up the photo on the other side of the door so Erza couldn't see it. There was no mistaking it, this was her. She looked a bit older than in the picture but anyone could see it was her, she wore the same armor, had the same hair and her eyes were just as stern yet soft as in the picture.

Erza gasped slightly when Natshi opened the door completely. The two stood in silence for a few minutes before Natshi started swaying a bit to the side to lean against the door frame, this snapped Erza out of her thoughts.

"My, you are like the miniature version of Salamander, just your eyes are different, but still, let's just hope you have your mothers good looks growing up" Natshi gasped at the thought that Erza knew her father! Excitement was the first feeling she felt, then confusion, why was she here and were was her mum. She looked pass the woman, her eyes searching the grassy lawn for her mother, she however was nowhere in sight.

"I have something I need to discuss with you, may I come inside?"

Natshi led Erza to the living room, and then scurried away to the kitchen. She pulled out her pink floral plastic cup and stepped on another stepping stool to fill it with water. She clumsily climbed of the stool and walked shakily back to Erza with the glass at it's fullest. Erza smiled sadly at the small child in front of her, she didn't want to be the bearer of such horrid news, but Master had personally asked her to do this so she was dead set on completing this request.

Natshi handed the glass to Erza whom in return took a small sip; she then pulled out the locket and gave it to Natshi. Her big eyes grew even bigger, her mother never went anywhere without this locket. Erza then started telling the story of what happened, Natshi listened with amazement about how awesome her mother sounded, just like the stories she had read in the books that she had, she felt pride in her mother. Then the story became dark and scary, Erza saw how the child's expression changed from amazement to pure horror as she started telling her that her mother had died. Erza tried to make it sound as gentle as possible, now stuttering over her own words but never breaking eye contact.

"N-no, I don't believe it, mommy won't die because she promised she would come back and make me chocolate and strawberry pie, mommy always keeps her promises!" the small child yelled whispered as she held the locket closer to her heart glaring at the intruder and liar sitting on her couch. Natshi wanted to run away from her, but she was frozen in her seat while her body shook uncontrollably.

"I am sorry to be the one to tell you this Natshi, I wish it wasn't true myself" Erza hugged herself as a few tears spilled down her cheek, Jade was like a sister to her. The two of them grew up together in the guild, she watched her grow into the fine mage she was, and adored her as any older sister would.

"I don't understand, mommy won't be coming back again? She is gone?" Natshi herself was in tears now; she didn't like this feeling at all. Her small chest felt heavy, like her heart was beating like a drum in her chest, somehow she felt like she was empty, or rather like she had lost a rather large part of who she was.

Erza and Natshi sat in the cabin crying in silence for what felt like hours, finally Erza regained herself.

"Natshi, I actually came here to fetch you and take you to Fairy Tail, to your father. I know it's sudden and you probably don't want to leave here, and that you have a lot of questions, but we must hurry, I think Natsu really wants to see you" Erza tried cheering her up, only to see the child stiffen.

"My dad, who- why didn't he come for me then, this is scary!?" Natshi whispered, she didn't really know how to feel about this situation, except for dread and terror, with sadness covering it all.

"He was hurt badly in the battle and was still passed out when Master, Master Makarov is the Master of the guild, well when he sent me to you. He didn't want you to be alone out here any longer that what could be helped."

Natshi was sad to be leaving the only home she knew, Erza had helped her pack and take as much stuff as possible. But she still had to leave a lot behind. They started walking, to Erza's dismay, really slowly towards town. Natshi stared at the ground, not wanting to face anyone; she really didn't want to look at Erza either, she stopped every once in a while to kick a small rock or just stare back, mostly expecting her mother to come running after her, to take her back home and to snuggle in the warm bed.

In town Erza was talking to the mage that was there to take over the job, she needed to make sure that everything went smoothly with the town's people. Natshi stayed with the luggage and waited for the Erza so they could continue, after a few minutes of staring at the ground beneath her feet, Erza's feet appeared. Natshi looked up and saw a gentle smile spread across Erza's face, gesturing they had to move on now.

They walked for hours, occasionally stopping so Natshi could catch her breath, then Erza lifted the small child onto the garage and the pace of the travel greatly improved. That night they set up camp at a small clearing and Erza build a fire to start preparing dinner. The small child just sat by a tree facing away from Erza, crying silently. After eating and cleaning a large monkey appeared, fear froze Natshi in her spot as Erza ex- quipped into a suitable armor and brought the beast down in mere seconds.

"That was amazing" Natshi whispered, Erza heard it and got a smug smile across her face.

"So Natshi, you want me to tell you about your dad?"

Natshi stiffened, her mother had promised to tell her about him, but never did. She always went through the album hoping to figure out who it was on her own, and she was pretty sure she had. She pulled the album out of her back pack and pointed to the pink haired man with the blue cat. Erza nodded in agreement.

"Well, that is him, though he is older now, hmmm let's see, your father is brave and loyal, he will fight until his magic is almost depleted and be on the brink of death, then he will stand up and fight some more. He doesn't give up; he even saved me, that is another story all together. He will never give up. He is one of the strongest and most reckless mages I know. He uses dragon slayer magic, fire. He is an absolute idiot, but he can't handle transportation, he gets motion sickness."

"Me too, I get motion sickness too!" Natshi gasped "I can also use fire magic, not very well though, see" Natshi made a small unstable flame appear in the palm of her hand for a mere seven seconds before it disappeared again.

"You must be a new generation of the dragon slayers. How interesting, I honestly had no idea! I really thought you would have your mother's magic since it is a lot less complicated than that of your father."

Erza spend the night telling Natshi about past time adventures and the girl was pretty soon talked to sleep though and Erza smiled softly at her as she pulled out the lacrima to call the guild. The cold night air felt soothing against the little skin that was exposed. Erza knew she had to repost to Master, everyone was probably itching for an update, and she was right.

Second chapter is finally complete, I know it is a bit slow but I feel the need to explain things. Next chapter is also almost complete, will upload next week after checking it and edit, hope you enjou :)

3. Chapter 3

"Erza, have you arrived yet? Why you are only calling now, did something go wrong?" Master yelled at the lacrima only to be shushed from the other side.

"She is sleeping" Erza said calmly "Master, she looks so much like him, it's actually scary" Erza giggled to herself as she turned the lacrima so the Master could see the sleeping child. He laughed as well.

"Off course she does, she is a member of our family now, how did she take the news" Master said in a softer voice.

"She is sad, but that is to be expected. She is rather shy though, I will make the travel home as soon as possible, I think she really can't wait to meet her father. I am just a bit concerned on how she will cope with the massive change, the house, or cabin rather, was very secluded, she didn't talk to anyone in town when we left either."

"Please be safe and hurry, all of us are waiting for our newest addition to the family. I have to go now, a lot of paperwork still needs to be filled from that day, I am sure she will adapt Erza." Makarov cut the feed and Erza went to sleep.

The trip home was filled with small conversation, nothing big, Natshi didn't talk much but Erza had soon realized the girl was definitely not an idiot like her father. When they arrived at the train station the girl clung to Erza for dear life, scared out of her mind. She only knew the town she was born in, and it was a very small town with probably 200 people. Now there were 200 people in one place and well Natshi was scared, it was new.

On the train back Natshi sat so close to Erza that it looked like she would be on her lap at the slightest move. She swayed here and there, tried to nibble on some nuts and then tried to lie down, her motion sickness was not as bad as her father's but still enough to make her stomach turn.

Natshi started asking questions, like why they took a train and how did the train work and why did the train work like that. Why was Erza's hair red and why did she wear armor, the normal why and how questions kids never seem to get enough of asking. Erza's smile was shaky as she tried explaining some of the things.

"What if he doesn't like me? What should I say to him?" Natshi softly asked, trying to get her mind off the feeling.

"Well, he will love you immediately, that much I know for sure, as to what to say to him, well that is completely up to you."

The train came to a halt and they exited the station. Natshi was amazed at how big the city was, people everywhere trying to sell all sorts of things, small children running around and even some adults acting like crazy people. Natshi stayed close to Erza the whole time, she was terrified she would get lost and be stuck in an alley somewhere with a cat licking her toes.

They finally reached the guild and Erza could see Natshi was exhausted; she opened the door for the small clumsy child, and led her inside. The guild went dead quiet. Everyone was staring at the child as she held Erza's leg, too afraid to move. She scanned over the guild until her eyes fell on him, the man that was her father. He was staring intensely at her, sniffing the air.

Natsu stared at the child, her scent was very similar to his, and he froze, not knowing what to do. His arm grew cold as he felt Grey pushing him forward. He rose to his feet and made his way to Erza and the very small girl, his daughter, he stopped a few feet away then crouched down so she could face him. However she hid her face behind Erza's leg, her very red face.

'_That is my dad, what do I do now? He's smiling at me! Should I smile back,' _she thought to herself as Erza stepped away, leaving Natshi exposed for the whole guild to see. All eyes were on them.

"Hello" Natsu said, his voice shaking a bit.

"Hi" Natshi whispered. She was scared.

Natsu and Natshi stood there staring at the ground for what felt like an eternity, both were at a loss for words, this was just too real for Natshi, she always imagined meeting her father, he would come to their house and laugh and pick her up and swirl her around the air.

"Want to sit down for a bit? I could get you a juice then we can talk for a bit if you want to?" Natsu was shaking now; sweat rolling down his face as the girl started to cry while he spoke. She nodded at him and took a seat at an empty table. Glancing up at her dad as he ran to the guild bar in a frantic search for juice, this made her feel rather happy at how he looked, she smiled softly at herself. A very beautiful woman handed him a glass and he gulped it down, only to stop a yell in surprise as he had just drank the juice. The poor man fell to the ground, while the beautiful lady whispered something to him and pat him on the back, then she gave him another glass and he very shakily walked back to the table. The glass was only half full as he spilled almost everything else as he placed it in front of Natshi. He in turn then took his seat and stared at his hands as Natshi gulped down the juice.

"Thank you" Natshi whispered as she set down the empty cup, then she looked around the guild, taking in all the faces and smells. This was where her mother had grown up, she saw these people every day. Natshi then looked at her father, he was staring at her now as well, and this was an awkward silence.

Mira-Jane walked over to the two silent figures with a guild stamp in her hand, not entirely sure if she should brake this silence.

"Natshi, where would you like your guild mark? Also what color would you prefer it to be in?"

"Natshi pointed to her shoulder and thought for a while on the color, she wanted it in the same spot as this man, this new father, so she decided to get it the same color as her mother.

"On my shoulder and in black please," Natshi said softly as Mira placed the guild mark. Natshi then turned her attention to her father, staring at him with her big eyes, expectantly waiting for him to do anything really. He cleared his throat then he places one hand behind his back.

"So, Natshi, what magic do you prefer?" he asked nervously.

"I was born with some magic, fire, even though it's not all that strong. Mommy has been teaching me transformation magic, well she only showed me once, she wasn't very good at it though. She didn't want me to practice my magic too much."

Hi there, I decided to upload this chapter early so I hope you like it, I have 62 pages written already its just going over it and editing it that I take my time with. Please enjoy the day.

4. Chapter 4

"I can teach you transformation magic if you want" Mira said smiling softly "and then Natsu, I mean your dad could teach you about fire" both pinkette's stiffened at the word dad. This was obviously going to be hard for the two.

Natsu had already build in an extra room, with the help of some other ages, well those that could stand; he then made a small room for the child, so she would have her privacy and still feel at home. Lucy had given him the idea and he had sent her shopping after she turned down the outfits he bought. He didn't really understand what he did wrong but the kick to the head obviously made its point. Grey and Juvia had tried to explain to him how he needed to approach the child since the two had one of their own.

"You must be exhausted, why don't we head home for the night" Natsu couldn't wait for her to be at his house, he just wanted to pick her up and hug her and never let go, but Lucy had told him to take it slow. He usually never listened to anyone, but this matter was different. He couldn't be his reckless self and cost himself a relationship with his child.

She went quiet and lowered her head, Natsu waited for her to respond, she was obviously thinking very hard. Natshi was unsure of what to do at this moment, she felt tired and she wanted to cry, he had asked her if she wanted to go home and she does, to her room while her mommy read her to sleep. She glanced at Erza, then held her breath and spoke once again.

"I want aunty Erza" Natshi whispered, this was too much for her. Natsu glared at Erza, but let this matter be for tonight at least.

"Erza, would it be okay if Natshi slept over at your place tonight," asked the now sulking dragon slayer. Erza bit the inside of her cheek and nodded. She picked up the sleepy Natshi and off they went. Natshi peeked over Erza's shoulder to see Lucy rubbing her dad's back. She wanted to go live with him but she was scared, and right now the only person she trusted was Erza. Their eyes met again and she blushed and gave him a small smile, she wanted him to run to her and pick her up, well she wanted to run to him and hug him, that man with the spiky pink hair and sharp eyes.

"Auntie Erza, do you think you could teach me your magic?" asked the very sleepy Natshi, Erza stared at her for a few moments before speaking.

"Huh, I thought you wanted to learn transformation and fire?"

"And ex-quip." Natshi said.

Erza did not know how to respond to this, she decided to go along with it, knowing that taming three magic's would be next to impossible and Natshi would drop one. At the girls dorm Erza laid the now sleeping Natshi on the bed. Taking a deep breath she decided to go soak in the bath. She stared out the window after her bath and saw Natsu outside, just sitting there.

"Natsu, what are you doing here, this is the girls dorm" Erza came out saying in her usual stern voice.

"Oh, well I went home but I couldn't sleep, I could not stop thinking about Natshi, its different now that I saw her with my own eyes, I just need to know where she is and that she is safe, why couldn't she just come home with me." Natsu felt the beast inside him pounding, it wanted its offspring, and so did he since they were one in the same. He stared up at the window, he could not enter the building since there was a magic circle around it, disallowing all men from entering the building, and he pouted once again.

"Natsu, she is save here, it's a dorm full of mages, ill protect her tonight just like I did on our way here. I know it's hard but imagine how she must feel. I'll talk to her and tell her she needs to go live with you, even though I'm sure that is her plan. I think the only reason she wanted to stay with me tonight is because she was scared, tired and nervous about spending time with you. Now go home before I kick your ass."

Natsu sulked away; Erza knew he wouldn't go far though, just out of sight. She went back to her massive room and crawled into bed next to Natshi. Natsu was sitting in a tree; he decided he would stay as close as possible to the child, even if it felt like she was miles away.

Natsu sat in the tree staring in the direction his child was, it still felt so surreal. He thought back to when Jade was still at the guild, everyday, then all the memories poured in.

A few years ago, guild Fairy Tail, Jade's pov

Jade was sitting by the bar reading her book, she glanced up as team Natsu came rushing into the guild, needless to say starting a fight as they stepped inside. She scooted over a few seats to get out of the danger zone and continued reading. A large body of Elfman hit the seat she was sitting in, she sighed in relieve, turning her full attention back to the words that made her soul tremble.

"Hi Jade-Chan, I have a huuuge favor to ask!" Lucy snuck behind her with her hands clapped together over her chest.

"Lu-Chan, I'm glad your back, what's up?" Jade tucked her white hair behind her ear, avoiding the sensitive spot just behind her ear, she honestly had no idea how she got the wound but it was there and it was annoying, no matter what she did it didn't fade at all, it was still the same as it was two months ago.

"You see I have a date tonight and I have absolutely no idea what to wear! I need your opinion." Lucy said with hearts in her eyes while swaying her hips from side to side, Jade stared at her dumbfounded.

"You should ask Levy, or Mira, as you can see I have no sense of fashion at all" Jade mumbled, staring down at her baggy gypsy pants and a shirt she had stolen out of her dad's closet before she moved. Shopping was too much of a hassle, she had been in the guild since she was a kid, her and Levy being really close friends, then one day Natsu brought the new member and Levy befriended the girl, so did Erza after a while. Jade had little choice in the matter as their friendship grew, she just didn't like the girly parts of this new friendship.

Erza was always calm, she had her strange quirks and dragged Jade cross country to eat cake, but she still mostly left Jade to her own devices, especially now that team Natsu was official.

Levy and Jade were inseparable when they were younger, there was an underground library the two kids would spend weeks in, needless to say she loved this friendship, and they only ever talked about books.

Now Lucy, Jade sighed, Lucy would drag Jade out shopping and to photo shoots and to get their nails done. Jade thought Lucy was a very nice person, just she wished that she would lay off a bit. She loved when she caught Lucy alone at home though, they would then share cups of tea and enjoy some new novel together, making comments and pointing out what could have happened.

"Sure I'll come by later Lu-Chan" Jade said, mentally kicking herself for not being able to ever say no, too scared of hurting people's feelings.

Jade watched as Lucy ran to Juvia to talk about love and stuff, it was funny really how Juvia adored her love rival. Natsu and Happy were sulking in a corner; she asked Grey what their problem was.

"Oh, they wanted to go to some resort for the weekend, or well team Natsu is leaving tonight, we received it as a gift from a client, and Natsu said it's better that we all go together because we are a team, when Lucy dropped the bomb that she had a date those two looked like their worlds crashed, Happy however told me they were planning a brilliant prank for Lucy and now it's impossible" Grey laughed, Jade giggled and stood up, Grey giving her a questioning look while she stretched her arms above her head.

Chapter four is a bit slow, I know but its the backstory starting up so I hope you enjoy, thank you for the review's I really appreciate it.

5. Chapter 5

"I need to mentally prepare myself, Lucy asked me to help her pick an outfit, and the last time I did it she changed her clothes 47 times, only to choose lucky number 2." Grey waved goodbye while Juvia gave Jade a stink eye. She and Lucy hurried off to their apartment building, seeing as Lucy was her next door neighbor; she then started brewing tea and sat down on Lucy's bed, getting in a comfortable position.

"So who is your date with, someone in the guild?" Jade smirked; Lucy smiled at her and sat down next to her while pulling a top over her head.

"It's Bixslow, don't laugh! He is a very nice guy even though he is so weird, he has been asking me for weeks and I couldn't turn him down again, after that whole battle of the strongest fiesca he has been trying hard to be, well better I guess, and honestly he is funny in his own twisted way," Lucy smiled, she stood in front of the mirror and turned to Jade, she wore a short blue miniskirt and a flowy pink top, Jade crossed her arms in a x above her head, she hated that top more than she hated shopping.

She spend the next two hours with Lucy deciding on an outfit, then right before she left, Natsu showed up pouting asking Lucy to go with them. He was rejected and then turned his attention to Jade, an evil smirk crossed his face.

"Jade, why don't you come with us?" Natsu said as he sneaked closer to her, she had already heard from Grey about the prank which meant the danger was now falling onto her; she stiffened and tried to think of any kind of excuse.

Before she could even say speak she felt a hand on her shoulder, Erza stood next to her and nodded. A cold sweat rolled down Jade's spine when Lucy whispered good luck. The decision was made and off Jade went, eying Natsu the whole way to find any type of clue of what he was planning, they had to take the train to the resort. Jade stared out the window most of the time trying to ignore Erza's intense eyes witch never left her, she got a feeling that this weekend was going to be full of surprises.

The resort was secluded deep in the forest with a massive dam at the back, outside were a lot of picnic tables and of course a nice fishing cabin. Inside was large; the place was bright and happy, the entrance had a large greeting area and there was a huge fish tank along the whole back wall.

Jade watched as Natsu and Happy immediately went to go fishing, she, Erza and Juvia went to the entertainment area and ordered drinks, Wendy and Charla went with Grey to explore the surrounding forests. They all met up a few hours later and started the party.

"Jade, why do you never come with us, you should join team Natsu!" Natsu yelled, a bit on the tipsy side, she laughed at him as she drank her drink. She stared at how Juvia and Grey were silently flirting and giggled to herself.

"Natsu, I'm already part of a team, and I enjoy my team because they aren't nearly as destructive and worrisome as you guys," she said and Grey laughed this time, everyone knew Jade enjoyed the silent jobs, she would take her enemies out without ever getting too close to them, her team mate was Mystogen, well not really team mate but they did go on four missions together in the past and he was her cover for when anyone asked, even though he wasn't around anymore she insisted he was still her team mate, after all family stayed family in Fairy Tail.

"Well we have all weekend to convince you!" Natsu laughed as he ordered more drinks from the bar, the exceeds were outside having a small party of their own with Wendy, appreciating the clear skies and bright stars.

Jade went to her room a little earlier than the rest, she wasn't very good at handling her alcohol, so she decided to go take a bath and cool down. As she left the room she caught Natsu staring at her, she smiled at him and walked on, he was probably getting ready for the prank, his facial expression looked determined.

She had been caught up Natsu's pranks before; it was not always a pleasant experience. He once put old fish bones and guts in her shoes, buckets of water on doors and her personal favorite was when he sent her a gift to call it even, when she opened the gift there were roses inside, she was allergic to roses. It only got worse when Lucy moved in next door and he found out where Jade lived, he made sure to raid her fridge regularly, pass out in her bed from time to time, he once even burned down half her kitchen, he said it was an accident but with him well destruction was a must, well the list went on.

Jade enjoyed her bath and got dressed, she went straight back to her room when she heard the party still going on full throttle, she unclasped the door, stood back and kicked in open, expecting a bucket but nothing. She carefully walked to the bed and flung the blanket to the other side of the room, surprisingly nothing was in her bed either.

"Jade what are you doing? Your weird" Natsu said as he stood by the open door, smirking. Jade jumped in her spot, she hadn't expected him to be standing there, she sighed and stared at him.

"Just making sure I don't walk into any traps Natsu" she said sheepishly, she was still a little drunk, about to become sober again.

He laughed "Well, Grey already said he spilled the beans so it wouldn't be fun when you know it's coming" he walked into the room and closed the door behind him, he took his hand out from behind his back and pulled out a bottle, "Share a drink with me before you go sleep?" he pouted, Jade eyed him as he poured the drinks, gesturing to her glass she leaned past and grabbed his, he can drink his prank drink himself. She watched him sip at the glass before she sipped her own, they had a bit of small talk and he reminded her of some past adventures.

"By the way what did you have planned for Lucy?" Jade smiled, every now and then while she was home she would hear Lucy scream the roof of the building and then yell at Natsu.

"Well, Happy found some centipedes and we caught them, we were planning on waiting until she was asleep and then releasing them in bed with her," he leaned back in the chair, "That will just have to wait until we get back, we caught a whole bunch more at the river outside so we have lots now," he laughed. Goosebumps formed all over Jade's body only thinking about waking up to all those tiny legs running over your body.

"So what's up? Why aren't you down there with everyone having a blast?" she asked, he began to shake and sweat. Jade took another sip of her drink and waited for him to reply.

"Erza started truth or dare, I escaped just in time" he mumbled and Jade burst out laughing, as if on cue her door flew open and Erza stormed in dragging Grey and Juvia behind her, her face was red and she was swinging around, Jade downed the half bottle still on the table, this could only sprout trouble.

"We are going ghost hunting! The barman told me there is a ghost in the forest that only comes out at night; we have to rid the world of its evil presence right away." Erza stumbled over her own words a little and her grip on the poor souls in her grasps only tightened. The two she was dragging behind her looked mortified as they formed an x with their arms signaling Jade this wasn't a good idea.

"Erza calm down, it's so late already let's just go sleep" Jade spoke, however she stood up and headed outside after Erza shot her a glare scary enough to melt ice, they split into three groups, Erza and Wendy with the exceeds, Juvia and Grey, Natsu and Jade.

"Natsu stop moping, let's just walk in a circle and sneak back inside at the front," Natsu hummed as he stared at Juvia and Grey headed the opposite direction, Erza was already out of sight. They started walking in a random direction while Natsu mumbled about being bored.

"I think this used to be a path, look" she pointed through a small clearing in the overgrown grass, a long path that lead up the mountain. Natsu made his hands catch fire so they can see where they were going. They found a temple at the top, Erza was standing by the door smirking into the Lacrima, the exceeds and Wendy nowhere in sight. Jade and Natsu walked a bit closer and Erza turned to them.

"Erza, we are going back, we can search for the ghost tomorrow." Jade said, she looked over to Natsu who had shrunk in fear; Jade turned her head to see Mira in her demon form holding her Lacrima and smirking darkly at them. The two young mages slowly backed away from Mira, when she had that face it usually meant something bad would happen. Erza had already opened the temple door and told them to go inside, more like ordered them.

"What is up with them, and why is Mira here? Think maybe the ghost can shape shift?" Jade asked, Natsu grabbed his head and ranted that if that was true the ghost could be anyone. She laughed at him trying to convince him she just made it up and that it was not possible, he calmed down a bit.

"Well since Mira is here, I presume it has something to do with Grey and Juvia, so let's look for a back door or something and head back," Jade chuckled as Natsu agreed, they walked through the temple for a few minutes staying close to the wall when they found a exit, the wall was broken and crumbling so they climbed through. Jade carefully looked around for any sign of the two female mages and when she was sure the coast was clear she and Natsu started walking back.

Natsu was being quiet now; he walked a little slower and placed his hands behind his head, staring at Jade, he wanted to say something but at that moment his mind was foggy. She on the other hand did not notice, she was too busy worrying that the two demon women would find them and well, she could only image what would happen then.

They sneaked back through the forest and past Erza and Mira who was at the bar celebrating their victory, Jade smiled as they successfully sneaked past the two. They headed back to her room; Natsu just fell into her bed and stared at the ceiling. Jade took of her jacket and stretched out once again, she wanted to sleep for two days straight.

"Oi Natsu, go sleep in your own room!" she said as she pulled him by the scarf, "Come on Natsu, I am tired!" She twisted the scarf around her arm and pulled as hard as she possibly could.

"Aww come one Jade, we all shared a bed before, besides Happy is staying in Charles's room so I'm going to be lonely" He complained as he held the other end of the scarf, he then pulled the scarf and she flew onto his chest before she could untangle the scarf from her arm, she tried to get up but Natsu wrapped his arms around her and lay on her back, holding her down.

"Natsu, get up I can't breathe." The muffled sound made him laugh a bit, he didn't move though and the two fell asleep like that after she finally stopped struggling.

The next morning the two made their way to get breakfast, no one else was awake yet so they ate in peace, well aside from Natsu's loudness and barbaric eating methods it was still peaceful for Jade.

"Jade," he said with his mouth full of food "Please" he stared at the floor, at the ceiling, out the window avoiding her eyes, blushing, "you know, we have been friends for a while now right?" she nodded, he was acting weird, "and I always prank you and we always used to go on a lot of jobs together, so I was wondering if maybe you would be my girlfriend or something" he scratched the back of his head blushing.

Jade felt like her world was ending, Natsu, the guild idiot Natsu was asking her out, she did like him a lot but never put any thought into it really, she had the impression that Lucy had a secret crush on him. Jade looked at him expecting that he would start laughing and saying he was joking, he did nothing of the sort, instead his face was very serious.

"Hum, sure I don't see why not" she said and he sighed in relief, she kept staring at him, unsure of what to do she had said yes, like she always did. She wondered if Natsu really did have feelings for her or if this was just another Natsu moment. She swallowed her juice and closed her eyes, her body hurt again, it has been happening a lot lately, it felt like something was clawing at the inside of her skin, she sighed and smiled at Natsu thinking she would just have to see where this led to.

Grey and Juvia came rushing through the door from outside, they looked like they spent the night outside, Grey was fuming, and Juvia was in a daze and bright red. Grey scanned the room and groaned in frustration. He stripped in the blink of an eye and Juvia started to steam while her face turned a dark maroon.

"EEEEErzaaaaaa, get your ass out here! You left us for dead in that damn temple!" Grey shouted, still holding Juvia's hand. Jade turned her attention to them thinking about how fast she and Natsu found a way out, they were idiots was the conclusion she came to.

"Grey-sama, please calm down, Juvia is happy she got to spend the night with Grey-sama" Grey blushed; Jade gave them a sly smile, only the gods knew what those two had done. Juvia moved closer to Grey and rested her head on his shoulder, he blushed more deeply now while moving to the open table next to Jade.

"Grey, me and Jade are dating now, whatever that means" Natsu shouted as he gave his signature grin, Jade deadpanned, she knew the idiot was just playing around, she looked over to see Grey give Natsu a sly grin, Natsu however went back to eating while Jade hid her face behind her hands. Things were sure to only get more complicated after this. Juvia placed her hand on Jade's shoulder whispering comforting things in her ear, Jade saw pity in the woman's eyes, that made her laugh at least.
